

JUST* TRANSITION

GREEN JOBS

Job quality means different things to different people, so we are calling on the Mayor to create a 'just transition taskforce' - incorporating employers, civil society, unions, the Living Wage Foundations, and similar organisations to create a vision for what good green jobs should entail; and potentially devise a process of certification for 'just transition champion' roles based on this.

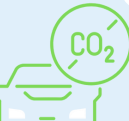

This could mean roles must be paid at least the living wage, or involve a certain degree of training, to be qualified as 'good' green jobs or apprenticeships

There are around 340,000 fuel poor households in London - this is predominantly privately rented and social housing. For these households, we are calling for significant upgrades: that will make their homes cheaper, healthier, and more comfortable, as well as reduce their carbon emissions.

A sustainable and just economy will need to prioritise and grow a broad range of low carbon professions - from those linked to renewable energy to care work.

For this campaign, we are focussed on jobs that will directly reduce carbon emissions in the short term, for example those linked to low carbon transport, housing retrofit or restoring nature.

These jobs will be varied: some hands-on, others office-based, some for those at the start of their career, others for those re-training. This is to ensure our 60,000 figure is targeted and can be more easily measured against in the future.

We support efforts by others to focus attention on other jobs essential to a just green future.
